

Dr. Wanda Bingham-Carter

Wanda Bingham-Carter is a pediatric physical therapist treating children in northeastern Arkansas Physical Therapy. She has a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Central Arkansas with an emphasis in physical therapy and a Doctorate degree in Physical Therapy. In February of 2017, she was recognized for being the first African American woman to graduate from the Physical Therapy Program at Harding University by her local church in Reed, Arkansas. When Wanda is not educating herself in her profession, she is watching her guilty pleasure shows "If loving you is Wrong by Tyler Perry, Married to Medicine and Basketball Wives. Hey, a girl needs her down time! Dr. Bingham-Carter is also the mother of two handsome boys and the coolest aunt to a host of nephews. In order for Wanda to pursue her passions and serve the community she has adopted the philosophical attitude that "Life is an echo. What you send out-comes back. What you sow- you reap.
